

2024 Warwick Summer School on Practice and Process Studies:

Impact of emerging "intelligent" technologies on organizational practices and processes

2024 Warwick Summer School on Practice and Process Studies.

Tuesday 09, Wednesday 10 and Thursday 11 July 2024

In-person attendance (Residential and non-residential prices available),

The Warwick Summer School convenes scholars interested in practice and process studies in an open and multi-disciplinary learning community characterized by dialogue, discussion, and joint exploration. The Summer School is designed for those with an advanced understanding of practice and process theories. The 2.5 days will consider the state-of-the-art of practice, process and routines studies (1.5 days) and discuss the impact of emerging "intelligent" technologies on organizational practices and processes (1 day). The event will take place in-person at Warwick University, UK.

State-of-the-art Understandings

The first 1.5 days of the program will cover the latest advancements in thinking about and the doing of practice and process studies. The summer school will open with a keynote from Ann Langley (HEC Montreal and Warwick Business School) on the theme of practice and process research. Attendees will have the opportunity to share their work during 'research clinics' and receive feedback on their work from peers and seasoned faculty including:

Davide Nicolini, Warwick Business School

Hari Tsoukas, University of Cyprus & Warwick Business School

Jorgen Sandberg, University of Queensland & Warwick Business School

Mira Slavova, Warwick Business School

Rene Wiedner, Warwick Business School

Omid Omidvar, Warwick Business School

Qian Li, Warwick Business School

2024 Theme: Impact of emerging "intelligent" technologies on organizational practices and processes

Each summer school we consider an advanced theme in practice and process studies. This year, we will discuss the impact of emerging "intelligent" technologies on organizational practices and processes together with Samer Faraj and David K Allen. We are excited to welcome these two scholars with decades of experience studying emerging technologies, social media, technology infrastructure, and their effects on organizations, organizing, and work.

Samer Faraj holds the Canada Research Chair in Technology, Innovation & Organizing at McGill University. His work spans innovation management, organizational theory, and healthcare management.

David K Allen is a Professor of Information Management at Leeds University. He focuses on information management practices and the influence of technology on organizational work.
